

Chartered Security Professionals

Register of Chartered Security Professionals admits 250th CSyP

I am delighted and honoured to be successfully admitted as the 250th Chartered Security Professional. I pursued this position building on and utilising my 30 year policing service with three fantastic forces, to strive for more progressive thinking for the future of collaboration with security and police professionals. Together we can provide the highest standards of service and continuous professional development to ensure the utmost safety and security of the communities in the United Kingdom and globally.

Being recognised for professional strategic aptitude is both humbling and motivating. CSyP is an exceptional platform to address complex issues within the security industry. One of the many reasons I applied is that Chartered Security Professionals are notably forward thinking around generational diversity. The CSyP Secure Futures Programme looks at initiatives for the new generation and generations to come, which, to my mind, is where the focus needs to be. How future generations see policing and security is different, and if we do not listen to these views and understand needs, skills, culture and opportunities we are in danger of losing currency for the future.

Understanding and embracing generational diversity is critical for our future, but specifically in the realms of technology, digital and cyber security challenges both nationally and internationally.

My three national portfolios of Disaster Victim Identification, Casualty Bureau and Excess Deaths attract national and international strategic partnership working. CSyP is clearly progressive within this international medium and I intend to use my strategic and tactical experience to develop future solutions and tackle issues faced by the security industry.

Finally, I am extremely proud to be the Deputy Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire Constabulary, which is currently at the forefront of new innovations for both the UK and global safety and security, and I am excited to have the opportunity to create an amity between local force, national policing and the security industry.